During the current school year the district shutdown for the whole week that included Thanksgiving. No real reason was given. A rumor has it that too many teachers were taking vacation that week and that not enough substitute teachers could be hired for Monday and Tuesday of that week. Does the budget for the coming year have sufficient sums earmarked to hire substitute teachers at a rate that will attract them? Or should families expect that taking the whole week of Thanksgiving off is the new normal and make child care arrangements accordingly?
